APRIL 2020

While the world continues to deal with the COVID-19 pandemic, it's economic impact is undeniable. We are all currently living through extraordinary times. Businesses across the globe have had to adapt to local and national mandates designed to protect the health and safety of the population.

OptaSense is committed to the safety and wellbeing of our employees, clients and partners and have taken the necessary steps to ensure our business operations continue with minimal disruption. The majority of our workforce are working remotely, based on local requirements, and have the equipment and technology necessary to conduct their daily tasks. For those that are not able to work remotely, we are ensuring that all health and safety protocols are followed.

We recognize that you continue to rely on us, perhaps more than ever, to ensure your business remains productive during these challenging times. We take that responsibility seriously. Our inventory levels remain strong and our delivery channels are positioned to get products to your business when you need them.

Even working from home, our employees continue to manage project delivery milestones, including:

- Submittal packages
- Factory acceptance tests
- Equipment shipments
- Project delivery meetings
- Site activities (as allowed)

They are also assisting design professionals, providing proposals and accepting orders so that you have what you need to keep your operations running.

While dealing with COVID-19 situation has presented unique challenges, it hasn't stopped us from taking care of our customers. Despite working outside of normal business conditions, we recently were able to provide delivery of six pallets of inventory to a major pipeline operator in Brazil. By hitting this key project delivery milestone, this 530 km pipeline project will remain on track once business returns to normal.
